Undergraduate and graduate students from biological, ecological, agricultural, communications, economics, and other related fields are encouraged to attend the Southern Plains Land Stewardship Summit and join us in shaping the future of the Southern Great Plains. This Summit provides a unique opportunity to engage with experts, landowners, conservationists, and fellow students from a variety of disciplines. Your perspectives and expertise are vital to the critical conversations that will unfold at this event. As a student, you bring fresh ideas, innovative solutions, and a passion for change that are crucial in addressing the challenges facing our land and communities.

Reduced Student Registration – Only $100!

We want to make it as easy as possible for you to participate. Take advantage of this discounted rate and gain full access to the Summit's discussions, field excursions, and networking opportunities.

Compete for Cash Prizes in the Art of Science Communication Poster Competition!

Have a research project, advocacy effort, or creative idea related to science communication? Show it off in our non-traditional poster competition, where your work is expressed as ART. No experience? No problem! Your submission can be a project you're working on, a topic you're passionate about, or an initiative you're actively involved in. Undergraduate and graduate students will compete in separate divisions for cash prizes.

Expand Your Network & Career Opportunities!

Meet leading scientists, conservation professionals, landowners, and policymakers in an immersive, hands-on environment. Connect with like-minded peers, explore career pathways, and identify new opportunities that could shape your future in conservation, land management, and beyond.
